BURGESS THREATENS TO VETO POWER ORDINANCE

Says Scootac Proposition Must Give Maximum Rate.

FUSS OVER AUTO SIGN

Dr. Seibert Says Sebring Garage Sign is On His Property and Must be Removed—Trouble Making Sign Was Erected at 3 o'clock in Morning.

Burgess John J. Bower announced at the regular meeting of Council, held on Monday evening, that he would veto the proposed Scootac Power Company franchise ordinance unless it were amended to specify a maximum rate to be charged in Bellefonte for electric lighting. Furthermore, this maximum rate, added Burgess Bower, must be lower than that now charged by the Bellefonte Electric Company.

President Harper, who has the ordinance in charge, explained that the ordinance should be considered as having been read the second time and that meanwhile it will be submitted to Borough Solicitor Mitchell for numerous changes. One proposed change will be the fixing of a definite time in which the proposed extension of lighting, heating and power equipment will be completed in Bellefonte.

Whether it is the intention of the promoters of the project to have incorporated in the franchise ordinance a provision binding them to a maximum rate for service is not known. By persons who say they have canvassed Council on their attitude toward the ordinance it is claimed that the measure now lacks sufficient votes to pass. Friends of the ordinance say that until the measure is revised and put into the form desired and necessary to meet certain objections it will be impossible to forecast just what the line-up will be when the franchise comes to a vote.

It looks as if Council has on its hands a little legal problem which may blossom forth into "some doings" before the matter is smoothed over. It all has to do with Dr. John Sebring's automobile garage sign, which is located in Allegheny Street, between the residence of L. T. Munson and the Dr. J. L. Seibert lot, across the alley. Council several weeks ago gave Dr. Sebring permission to erect one or more signs. Dr. Seibert claims that the sign is located on his property and that it must come down. Dr. Seibert, accompanied by John Blanchard, his lawyer, appeared before Council on Monday evening and formally declared himself. Mr. Blanchard expounded the law on the subject. He pointed out that a property-owner has jurisdiction in front of his property to the centre of the street.

When Dr. Seibert and his lawyer retired Council, that is all but Mr. Sheffer, declared that something would have to be done. They decided to go ahead and do it, the one thought being to order the sign taken down. Just how to do it was the vexing question. Mr. Musser finally offered a motion, rescinding the motion giving Dr. Sebring permission to erect the sign. This was about to go through when somebody asked whether Council could in such a manner revoke the permission granted. Mr. Sheffer kept the uncertainty fanned along nicely by occasionally inquiring whether Council knew just who owned the exact spot picked out for the pole that supports the sign that points the way to the Sebring garage. The discussion brought out the fact that fearing Dr. Seibert might secure a restraining order from the Court, Dr. Sebring had paraded out in his nighties and erected the sign at 3 o'clock in the morning. Because of the hour chosen for this pretty nearly everybody said something was surely wrong. The information nevertheless boosted the rating on Dr. Seibert's pugilistic ability, although he and Dr. Sebring have never donned the mits.

One pleasant feature about knotty problems in Council having to do with anything and everything not of a legal character is that they are usually unloaded upon the Street Committee. Troublesome points, involving the law in any shape or form, are promptly unloaded upon the Borough Solicitor. This invariably happens after Council has thoroughly debated the matter and to all appearances is just on the point of reaching a show-down. So it was with the Sebring sign. The Musser motion to haul down the sign was before Council, President Harper had solemnly announced the motion and called for the ayes and noes and the few spectators held their breath in exciting anticipation of something dreadful about to happen.

BUILD MONSTER DYKE TO PROTECT HATCHERY

To Erect Concrete Wall to Prevent Repetition of Flood Damage.

REPAIRS TO COST $3000

State Fish Commissioner Meehan Visits Hatchery and Orders Improvements—New Trout Pond and High Wire Fence To Surround Grounds.

The flood damage to the Bellefonte Fish Hatchery several months ago amounted to upward of $2500. State Fish Commissioner William E. Meehan last week came up from Harrisburg and authorized the expenditure of $3,000 to restore the hatchery to its former condition. A number of new features will be included in the repairs, chief among which will be the construction of a monster concrete dyke to protect the hatchery in the event of future floods.

The proposed dyke will be 300 feet in length, and will be 10 feet thick at the base and four feet at the top. The dyke will be 5 feet high through its entire length. Commissioner Meehan said that had such a dyke been built when the hatchery was constructed there would have been no loss or damage as a result of floods.

Commissioner Meehan also ordered a large trout pond built. This will be oval in shape and will be 150 feet long and 40 feet wide at the center. He also directed that the walls of No. 2. Hatchery be rebuilt and the building restored to its former condition.

The Shugart spring was ordered repaired and put into its normal shape. An ice house, 14x20 feet, will be built and new wagon and horse houses erected.

In the future the hatchery grounds will be surrounded by a 5-foot high wire fence. The fence will be of Knox type, the wires being so firmly constructed that persons may climb over them with the same ease as one may ascend or descend a ladder.

FAKE FISH WARDEN

State Fish Commissioner Rudely Explodes Claims of Alleged Agent.

While in Bellefonte State Fish Commissioner Meehan investigated the actions of a self-styled fish warden, who appeared in town on Friday and pretended to arrest Cyril Moerschbacher for "catching trout out of season." The so-called warden interrupted young Moerschbacher while the latter was fishing in Spring creek, nearby the Bush House. Moerschbacher promptly resented the alleged warden's activity, especially when the latter made the ludicrous statement that the trout season closed on June 14. To back up his claim Moerschbacher showed the alleged warden one of W. H. Miller's cards, giving the trout season as from April 15 to July 31, inclusive. The alleged warden claimed to have with him a book of fish laws and that this set forth that the season for trout closed on June 14. The alleged warden and quite a crowd of others visited "The Republican" office, where a copy of the game and fish laws was examined. This, of course, showed that the trout season closes with July 31. The alleged warden left, stoutly declaring that he had been acting as a warden for two or three years and that he never knew the season for trout closed later than June 14.

Commissioner Meehan was angry when he learned the facts. He expressed regret that the name of the so-called warden had not been learned, adding that if the identity of the man could be established he would prosecute him for falsely personating a State officer. Commissioner Meehan said:

"You may say for me that the man was not a fish warden. His very action demonstrated that. Any fish warden who did not know that the trout season closed July 31, instead of June 14, would not remain very long in my department. The law closing the trout season with July 31 has been in force for nine years or longer, as any warden knows perfectly well. I am sorry that the name of the man was not secured, for I should be glad to prosecute him for falsely personating a State officer."

By some persons it was afterward suspected that the socalled warden was in reality a detective and that he was here trying to run down the thieves who recently robbed the cash drawer in the Pennsylvania Railroad passenger station. Those holding this suspicion were disposed to believe that the man went to rather extreme measures to have it be generally known, or understood, that he was a fish warden.

MANY VALUABLE BOOKS OF REFERENCE IN FRANCIS SINNICKSON RHOADS LIBRARY

Thus far the public have known in a general way of the gift by Miss Rebecca Rhoads to the Bellefonte Y. M. C. A. of what is known as "The Francis Sinnickson Rhoads Memorial Reference Library." This testimonial to the memory of her late brother by Miss Rhoads constitutes one of the most splendid gifts to the public announced here in many years. Up to this time, however, nothing has been written in a descriptive way of what the library contains. A glance at the appended list of the several books presented by Miss Rhoads gives to the public the first insight into the actual value of the library, the wide field it covers and the opportunity it affords for instruction, entertainment and diversion. All persons whether members of the Y. M. C. A. or not are invited to call and read any books in the library, absolutely free of charge.

Since she presented the library to the Y. M. C. A. Miss Rhoads has made a number of valuable additional contributions to the shelves. PALMER NOT ALONE IN PLOT TO BREAK JAIL

Claims Bert Campbell, Another Prisoner, Planned Scheme.

BOTH WERE TO ESCAPE

Frustrating of Bold Attempt to Dig Way Out of Centre County Jail Results in Prisoners Implicated Accusing Each Other.

Joe Palmer's recent attempt to tunnel his way through the wall of his cell at the Centre County jail has brought to light the fact that Bert Campbell, another prisoner, was also involved in the scheme. Palmer, his plans to get away having been rudely interrupted by Sheriff Hurley, now places the responsibility upon Campbell, claiming that the latter originated the attempted escape and also served as a look-out while he (Palmer) spent three nights in digging through the massive wall.

When Palmer was caught a few hours before he expected to escape through a hole in the jail wall there were but three prisoners in prison. They were Palmer, Campbell and a boy. The last mentioned knew of the plot to escape but was not involved in it. Palmer and Campbell frightened him into silence.

Campbell's complicity in the scheme explains how it was possible for Palmer to dig out a large section of the wall at the rear of a cell without his action being discovered earlier by Sheriff Hurley and Deputy Sheriff Rees. It now develops that Campbell each night stationed himself at a point where he could see anybody approaching the entrance to the cell room. In this manner he on one or more occasions was able to warn Palmer in time to have all work in tunneling through the wall stopped before the jail officials could approach the point of operations.

Campbell, as is also Palmer, is awaiting trial on a charge of larceny. Palmer, as has already been related in "The Republican," was arrested on the charge of larceny at Monument. Campbell was arrested on the charge of stealing a bicycle while traveling through Milesburg. Campbell is supposed to come from Buffalo or Albany. The fact that both Palmer and Campbell were involved in the plot to break jail has caused Sheriff Hurley to redouble his efforts to learn more about the two prisoners. Palmer is said to have confided to another prisoner that he was not guilty of the theft charge at Monument but that he had to escape from jail before his identity and whereabouts might be learned by prison officials in another city, supposedly in West Virginia.

Wanted for Murder.

Chief of Police Dukeman was yesterday notified to be on the lookout for Pete Kupshsi, a Slav, wanted by the Renovo police on the charge of murdering Alanda Smith at that place on Monday night. Kupshsi was reported as having struck out for the mountains and heading this way. His description is given as follows: Height, 5 feet, 10 inches; weight, 165 pounds; age, 30 years; has black curly hair; two teeth out; stoppage in speech; when he left Renovo wore dark shirt and string tie.

Off to Camp.

Company L, of Bellefonte, will depart on the Lewisburg train, at 1.50 tomorrow afternoon, for the annual encampment, which will this year be held at Selinsgrove. The advance detail of six members depart today to aid in preparing the camp for the company, which will be in charge of and Lieuts. Taylor and Brown Co. L, is attached to the Twelfth Regiment, Third Brigade. This will be the first time the boys have ever camped at Selinsgrove.

Tyrone Band Concert Here.

Bellefonte is to be favored with a concert on Saturday evening, from 6.30 to 7 o'clock, by the famous Tyrone band. The band will accompany the Pennsylvania Railroad Shopmen, who hold their annual picnic at Hecla Park during the day. On returning from the park in the evening, the band will parade up High Street and will give a concert for one-half hour on the Court House diamond.

Thieves at Port Matilda.

Thieves visited A. W. Reed's store, at Port Matilda, on Tuesday night of last week, carrying off a quantity of shoes, overalls, cigars, candy, etc. Later in the night thieves carried off a number of bags of oats from the barn on the Victor Weston farm, below Port Matilda. Wagon tracks nearby the barn indicated the means used to remove the oats.

KIMPORT VOTED WITH REORGANIZERS' FACTION

Democratic County Chairman Lined Up With Guthrie Crowd.

2 RIVAL CONVENTIONS

Democratic Organization Ripped to Splinters Yesterday at Harrisburg—Reorganizers Again Elect Guthrie State Chairman.

Despatches from Harrisburg state that all efforts of the warring Democrats to get together yesterday failed and that two rival meetings of State Committees were held. Democratic County Chairman A. B. Kimport, of Centre County, who had been pulled and hauled about by the regulars and the Guthrie factions here, finally landed in the camp of the antis, voting with the party reorganizers, who re-elected G. W. Guthrie, of Pittsburg, State Chairman. The regulars elected Walter E. Ritter, of Lycoming County, State Chairman.

Before going to Harrisburg Chairman Kimport declined to commit himself as to which faction he would support. He was offered railroad tickets to Harrisburg and return by representatives of both factions, each hoping to thus obligate him and place a lien on his vote for State Chairman. The Guthrie faction some time ago sent out a letter offering free railroad transportation to members of the State Committee willing to be subsidized. Later a similar offer was made by representatives of the regulars.

With the two propositions of attempted bribery before him, Chairman Kimport refused to say what he would do when he got to Harrisburg. Last reports received from him were that he had refused to accept a free railroad ticket from either faction and had paid his own railroad fare to Harrisburg.

Just what punishment will be meted out to Chairman Kimport by the regular Democrats in Centre County remains to be seen. Before going to Harrisburg Kimport made up his mind that he would be in wrong with one faction or the other, regardless of how he voted for State Chairman. The fact that he lined up against the regulars, or old-time party men here, is interpreted as meaning that he has no further use for them.

The Harrisburg despatches state that the reorganizers claimed to have 56 of the 91 or more members of the State Committee attending their meeting, at which Guthrie was re-elected. The Guthrie crowd claimed that not more than 35 bona fide members of the State Committee attended the meeting of the Guffey outfit. The Guffey managers declared that more than a majority of the State Committee attended their meeting and that the convention of the reorganizers was packed by a lot of party kickers not entitled to vote.

The one point on which both factions agreed was that the developments of the day demonstrated beyond any doubt that the Democratic party in Pennsylvania is today more completely demoralized than ever before in its history.

As to School Books.

As the month of August approaches agents of school books are reported to be especially active and that school directors are being besieged day and night. All of which is of course entirely legitimate on the part of the agents. At the same time, school directors should be careful not to be misled. Some years are better suited than others for the adoption of certain books. The change in the school laws will make necessary a change in civics and it will be difficult to secure an up-to-date book in this line this year, as the same data cannot be obtained and compiled in time to have it printed. The same is said to be true of geographies, as the industrial and agricultural data deemed necessary cannot be secured in complete form before the beginning of the new year.

BOOSTING THE VILLAGE

A Little Story Some People May Find Interesting and Beneficial.

The boost idea is steadily permeating the atmosphere of the small village and town, and there is a growing feeling that even the crossroads can do something by concerted action to add to its advantages and to prevent all its business from being lost to some near-by or distant city. An organized effort to promote the good of a town is certain to make it a better place in which to live and do business.

In one village in Iowa, where the catalog houses had held full sway for a number of years, the merchants at last woke up. As is usually the case in such revivals, one man did most of the awakening, for there must always be one man to take the initiative and hold the reins for a while. This man was the proprietor of a general store. He was young and had taken charge of the store at his father's death. He was accustomed to seeing business in that village done in the most haphazard way, but during his short experience in a city position he had learned that people hustle for trade when they cannot get it in any other way.

When he was forced to come home from the city to run the village store he determined to make something of the business. The more he thought about it and tried to figure out a method, the more he became convinced that in order to make the business a success, the village itself must be made a success. He knew that what would help the community at large must help his business, and that the general interests of the place and his own personal interests lay in the same direction. He saw what old-fashioned country merchants never can see, that the best way to succeed is not the selfish way.

First of all he put his own store and stock in good condition; then he set out to interest the rest of the merchants in some kind of cooperative work for the good of the village. They threw cold water on the proposition. It was a dead town, they said; nothing could be done there anyway. At last, however, he found two other men who thought as he thought, who agreed to give up some of their time to making the whole village a better business place, and incidentally a better place in which to live. The three men organized themselves into a sort of Star Chamber Commission. They decided that they would help that village in spite of itself. If the rest of the business men did not want to organize just then, let them wait. Probably in the end they could be made to see light, and then the work would be more simple.

The commission of three first began to promote optimism by talking better times, by saying that business was getting better and by proving it with figures and arguments. One of the men was the editor of the village newspaper and he immediately began to insert editorials and news items along the line adopted. He pointed out all improvements in any conditions. He gave each week facts regarding the number of farmers trading in the village, the amount of produce shipped out with the resultant influx of money, the condition of the local potato or grain crop, and many other things of local financial interest. He gave detailed figures wherever he could get them.

He also began to run in each issue of the paper something in the nature of a little talk to the people on the advantages of trading at home. This matter was given five inches of double-column space in the advertising section, with a catchy heading. It showed the endless number of purposes accomplished by money that stayed right in the village; and contained every argument he could devise that might have the effect of influencing people to give the local merchants a chance to sell them goods, before sending away for them. He wrote nothing but what any village editor can write and ought to write; but he wrote it, and most editors do not. It was not long before these little talks begun to bear fruit.

In the meantime, the three young men were talking daily and nightly with this or that merchant, showing him how he could meet mail-order competition and how he could interest the farmers and other people in his store. Then they invited all the business men of the village to an informal smoker where they could talk over any local business matters in a friendly way, mixing in local gossip or any other matters they desired. At the end of this smoker some one suggested that such meetings should be held oftener, and it was agreed to hold another in two weeks. The rest was easy. After a few more of those informal meetings, which were interesting and profitable, there was not a merchant in town who was not in favor of some kind of an organization. It formed itself when the need became obvious.—Country Gentleman.

Hay Fever and Summer Colds.

Must be relieved quickly and Foley's Honey and Tar Compound will do it. E. M. Stewart, 1034 Wolfram St., Chicago, writes: "I have been greatly troubled during the hot summer months with Hay Fever and find that by using Foley's Honey and Tar Compound I get relief." An Old-Time Honeymoon.

Some of the wedding reminiscences of the old man in the chimney corner—if there is a chimney corner, which is doubtful—are almost startling in their financial simplicity, at least when viewed from the modern cut glass and $60-a-month apartment point of view, says the Chicago Tribune. Get the old man to talking some time and find out how much his wedding journey cost him and how much capitol he had on which to set up the business of housekeeping. Some of these reminiscences are almost unbelievable, they show such a simple confidence in Providence and good luck and the ultimate working out of things for which no present provision could be made.

Quite a typical honeymoon of sixty or seventy years ago was the prairie schooner voyage. Back in Indiana or Ohio or some other of the thickly settled communities the affair would start with two loving hearts and two strong and willing pairs of hands. The lovers would have an abounding faith in themselves and in the future. Otherwise the lovers' assets would include $9 in cash, a Sunday suit of clothes more or less homespin, a good constitution, and a father who stood ready to give him upon the wedding day his parental blessing and a yoke of oxen and the wagon in which to go West and take up a homestead.

The modern mother is not often to be found who could view such a stock and bondless venture without forebodings. But the mothers of that day do not appear to have been appalled.

"Mary is strong and willing," the mother would say. "I've taught her how to cook and sew and keep house, and if I do say it, she does me credit."

The wedding ceremony that followed the understanding was simple in the extreme, most of it was homemade, costing little but loving work. Then the honeymoon followed out into the West, with no especial destination, no money for trousseaux and tips and bridal suites and furniture and flat rent. A little cabin somewhere was put up by the new husband himself upon a likely 160 acres, the latter the wedding present of the United States.

Such courtships and weddings cost little beyond a great capital of courage. From them have come the men of today who think it necessary to bestow grand pianos and European bridal voyages upon their sons and daughters before a wedding can be properly solemnized.

Old Pipe's Glory Fades.

Most smokers of the pipe, we are told, admit that a pipe is not agreeable until it has been well seasoned, and hence the well-burnt, dark colored, oil-laden pipe is as a rule a highly cherished accessory to the tobacco habit, says a London letter to the New York Sun. To this any pipe smoker will agree. And he perhaps may add the commonly accepted argument that it is the accumulated oils and products of combustion which give the pipe its so-called antiseptic qualities.

This complacency of the pipe smoker has now been rudely broken in upon by one Dr. J. D. Reckitt, who affirms that the seasoned pipe may be poisonously saturated with the oils, be these nicotine, pyridin, or other toxic substances which the chemist has detected from time to time in the condensed products of tabacco smoke.

The things which first started Dr. Reckitt on his voyage of discovery was the continuous breathlessness of one of his patients. All the common causes of breathlessness having been gone over in vain Dr. Reckitt began to think over the less uncommon objects.

At length an old "friend" was suspected as the cause of the trouble, in the shape of a very dark-colored briar, which he had smoked off and one for ten years. The suspicion, it seems, was well founded, for immediately on giving up his pipe the breathlessness passed off, and in a month or two he was for the first time in some years free from his distressing symptom.

Dr. Reckitt then upsets another illusion. His patient, having given up his pipe "consoled his tobacco hunger with a dozen Turkish cigarettes daily, which did not appear to do him any harm."

"Doan's Ointment cured me of eczema that had annoyed me a long time. The cure was permanent."—Hon. S. W. Matthews, Commissioner Labor Statistics, Augusta, Me.

English Joke.

There are blissful moments when the hot weather paragraphist lays down his pen and feels that, for once in a way, comment is a fatuity:

And the writer, reaching for the whiskey decanter, plucks the seltzer, from ice pail, and waits the while you digest the following little slice of raw realism from the advertisement columns of the South Wales Echo:

"House to house canvassers wanted. Must speak Welsh, and be able to go away."—The Pink 'Un.

Kidney Diseases are Curable.

Under certain conditions. The right medicine must be taken before the disease has progressed too far. Mr. Perry A. Every One Befriending.

"Hist!" hissed the stealthy footpad as he knocked the druggist down; "deliver up your wad at once before I crack your crown! You need not say you have no mun—I've watched an hour or more and 50 people passed within and then came out your door!"

"Alas, sir," wailed the druggist, as he rose with features pale, "I pray you, Mr. Footpad, kindly listen to my tale: Full well I know that people do go in and out my place, but some come in for postage stamps and some come in to face the mirror and adjust their hats, or borrow pen and ink, and some come in to ask the time, and some come in to think, and some come in to meet their friends, and some their friends do bring, to ask me for an almanac or else a piece of string; and some come in to ask me where a certain car to catch, while more come in to telephone or ask me for a match; and some to look up something in the street directo-ree, and some have nerve enough to try to borrow dough of me, and, some come in to sit an hour and hand out sage advice, on how to run a drug store and to treat the people nice; and some come in to rip me up, and some to rip me down, because I closed at 12 one night when they stayed late in town, and some come in to tell a joke that I have heard before, and then because I don't 'haw-haw!' they go away dead sore, and some come in to change a bill and then go out again, while some come in to warm themselves, or get out of the rain, and some come in to leave their books and some a suit case bring, and some to leave a camera and some, some other thing, some come in to ask me if I think it's going to rain, and some come in and turn around and walk right again, some come in to ask me for a place to get good milk, and now and then one may come for chocolate lined with silk. Some come in to ask for points to find their way about and some come in to ask me—but here my rhyme gives out."

"Enough! enough!" the robber cried, "Yours is an awful ailing! My life of crime has never met a story so appalling! Forgive that lump upon your head made by my club descending, and take my purse, I feel accurst to think I came near ending the life of one whose only work is every one befriending."—Boston Post.

Burn Strawberry Leaves Now.

Now that the strawberry crop has been gathered is the proper time for mowing the leaves of the plants as low as possible with a scythe or mower, and letting them cure quickly, then raking them together within the rows and burning them. Straw should be added if necessary to make enough fuel to burn the leaves. This is the common method of the most practical strawberry growers in suppressing insect pests and plant diseases, and renewing the old strawberry rows or beds, which should also be properly cultivated and hoed. It is for this reason that State Zoologist H. A. Surface replied, from Harrisburg, to one of the instructors in the Pennsylvania School of Horticulture for women, saying:

"The best method of getting rid of the leaf curler or strawberries is to mow the leaves now, which is just after the harvest, and burn them as soon as possible. Some persons throw a little straw between the vines, and mow the leaves, rake them on to the straw and burn them. This gets rid of both plant disease germs and insects, and I recommend it as proper. It is practiced by some of our best berry growers."

Stuffed Hen Hatches.

In the window of an Eight avenue, New York, delicatessen store is a basket of eggs on which has reposed a stuffed Plymouth Rock hen with a sign attached stating that "fresh eggs are on sale within."

The store was crowded with customers and the proprietor was too busy to notice that another crowd had gathered in front of his show window.

Finally a lull in trade came, whereupon he noticed those who stood out front gazing interestedly at something, he knew not what, in his window. He stepped out to see what it was.

The neat and the stuffed hen had served to incubate several of the eggs and three small chicks had pecked their way to freedom through the shells of as many eggs, while others showed signs of approaching life.

"Didn't know I had an incubator here," said the man.

"Those chickens are mighty foolish to came out into this scorched world. They didn't know when they were well off!" responded a man who had stood in the broiling sun for half an hour watching the incubating process.

A Hint From Massachusetts.

Some time ago Gov. Foss of Massachusetts appointed an expert to investigate the desirability of a public utilities commission for that state such as is in operation in New York and Wisconsin. His report has now been made to the governor and by him transmitted to the Massachusetts Legislature with a recommendation that the proposed commission be authorized by law. This report is an exhaustive study of the whole question based on careful researches in other states as well as in Massachusetts. It demonstrates that in states where commission are empowered to act on their own initiative, as in New York and Wisconsin, effectual control of public utilities is possible and this without working hardship to any corporation, while at the same time improving the quality of the service rendered.

Although large discretionary powers are vested in these official bodies they have not been used, so far as the investigator was able to discover, beyond the demands of the ultimate public interest. It is shown that should the commissioners attempt to exceed their authority, constitutional limitations and the courts would quickly intervene. Their mandatory powers are employed only in cases of urgent necessity and as a rule the great corporations are prompt to comply with the reasonable regulations laid down, since they are designed in the broadest sense for the benefit of all concerned. The dangers that had been predicted from such rigid supervision and control by the state have not materialized. On the contrary, it is declared, such advantages have resulted from these commissions that there is a practically unanimous demand for their continuance. "The enactment of the Public Service Commissions law in New York, for instance, was bitterly opposed, but it is generally conceded that in view of the satisfactory results obtained during the period, almost four years, in which the law has been in operation, any attempt to repeal it or to curtail the powers of the commission would meet with overwhelming opposition on the part of the public."

Gov. Foss, in his message accompanying the report, declares that a public utilities commission in Massachusetts would "keep the service right up to the mark," and in addition there would be a better chance of properly developing the trade, commerce and transportation of the state." This has been the experience elsewhere that in the long run the corporations have profited from the operation of the system. If the Massachusetts Legislature shall pass the desired law, one more example will have been set for Pennsylvania. The report declares there is no doubt that "eventually practically every state in the Union will have a Public Service Commission in line with the progressive legislation enacted in Wisconsin and New York." It is to be hoped that at the next opportunity Pennsylvania will join the procession.—Pittsburg Gazette Times.

Of Interest to Women.

In nothing has man peacocked himself so much when strutting as the lord of Nature as when he thought about his artistic accomplishments. And on consideration is might seem that women had really failed in the field of art; but one must not form conclusions hastily. The truth of the matter is two-fold (and perhaps more). In the first place, women have not as yet tried to be artistic on any large scale, and in the second place they have not wanted to be artists except in a few isolated cases, and in these they have produced excellent results in the arts left open to them. But there has been a change in recent years; women seem desirous of practicing the fine arts, and men had better look out.

A visit to a recent art exhibition recalled the fact that the picture by women equaled, and looked like beating, the pictures of the men.

Not only in art, but everywhere you find the same growth of the woman's power; she is a recognized force today—one which men will not be able to conquer.

Honest Medicines Versus Fakes.

President Taft's message suggesting an amendment to the Pure Food and Drugs law in its relation to Prepared Medicines, does not refer to such standard medicines as Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and Foley Kidney Pills, both of which are true medicines carefully compounded of ingredients whose medicinal qualities are recognized by the medical profession itself as the best known remedial agents for the diseases they intended to counteract. For over three decades Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has been a standard remedy for coughs, colds and affections of the throat, chest and lungs for children and for grown persons, and it retains today its pre-eminence above all other preparations of its kind. Foley Kidney Pills are equally effective and meritorious. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

Sashes Reign.

Never were there so many skirts with sash or panel ends. The style has come in with a rush. On all sides one sees the two swinging ends at the back of skirt from waist to hem made of many materials and more or less ornamented. These may be made of satin, of twilled silk, of worsted and of silk basket braid. They are always lined, or at least widely faced and weighted at the end.

On the worsted ones, which match the gown, there is an ornament of cord braid at each end and a large ornament at the waist line where the sashes are held to the skirt. Instead of the latter there may be a flat plump bow of satin or silk.

These are admirable accessories to a plain and a tight skirt. They offset its narrowness in a graceful way and give an effect of fullness without interfering with the fashionable cut of the skirt. They are at their best on high-waisted skirts, although the tailors have sometimes put them on skirts at the normal waist line.

SAVED BY HER SKIRTS

Skipper's Wife Floated Until Hele Came to Rescue Her.

The steamboat Sandy Hook, which runs from Atlantic Highlands to New York, was just off Bad Ridge a few days ago coming up when Captain Elmer Martin, who had the wheel, thought he heard a woman calling for help. He stopped the Sandy Hook's engines and then sent her hard astern as the cries came more distinctly. The passengers began to crowd the starboard rail and call out that they could see a woman in the water.

The Sandy Hook's crew hustled a boat overside and pretty soon were back with an unconscious woman lying in the bottom of the boat. A doctor among the passengers gave first aid and by the time the boat reached her pier at the foot of West Forty-second street, the woman had revived enough to say that she is Mrs. Eva Engelson, the wife of a scow captain. Dr. Ross took her to New York Hospital, where she continued her story.

Mrs. Engelson said that she had been on the scow Margaret M., of which her husband is captain and crew. The Margaret M. was the tailender in a tow to which a tug made fast at St. George, Staten Island, and started to pull up to Cliff Haven. Captain Engelson, his wife said, was in the bow tending the towline and she was left alone in the stern. She could just see her husband's back over the top of the low cabin and then as she tripped on a fender and toppled over the stern she couldn't see him at all. Apparently he did not hear her cries, for the tow went on its way and left Mrs. Engelson afloat with only her skirts for a life preserver.

Mrs. Engelson says she can't swim and that it must have been her skirts—she doesn't wear the fashionable stingy kind—that kept her up. She was in the water what seemed to her a long time, and two boats passed without seeing her or hearing her shouts for help. She had about decided to drown when the Sandy Hook came along.

When Mrs. Engelson had recovered somewhat they transferred her to Bellevue Hospital. She didn't seem to worry a great deal about what Capt. Engelson thought or did when he found that his wife was missing. He'll probably hear about his wife's adventures when the Margaret gets to Cliff Haven.

Championed A Chinaman.

It was a car line that runs into the vastness of the Bronx and it was in the tiny hours of the morning when the matter of schedule was not so important as to worry the car men. There were three passengers, a man with ideas of justice, another man with an aggressive air due to indulgence in liquor, and a Chinaman. The man of ideas wanted to read and the Chinaman wanted to sleep, but the other had different ideas. He announced loudly that he came from California, that he was vitally opposed to Oriental immigration, and that the intruder from the Celestial Kingdom then present was particularly obnoxious to him. When language failed to make any impression on the calm of his newfound foe, he took to shaking the Chinaman, pulling off his hat and otherwise disturbing plans of slumber.

Then sense of justice in the third man awoke.

"Here, stop that!" he commanded.

"What's it to you?" asked the Californian, offensively. "Do you like Chinks?"

"If you touch that one again, I'll tend to you," was the reply.

The other shook up the Chinaman again, slapped his face, and threw away his hat. The man of justice leaped over two seats, and soon there was a royal fight. The motorman stopped the car to get a good view, and the contestants soon rolled out on the street, keeping up the pummeling. Justice won, however, and it was a very meek Chinesebaiter who was lifted up by the motorman and conductor and put back on the car.

The gallant champion of justice dusted off his clothes, noted a rip in some new trousers he had just donned that day, felt of an eye that gave promise of decorating qualities on the morrow, and then climbed aboard the car. He received the plaudits of the car men, and was prepared to hear some words of thanks from the abused Oriental.

The Chinaman was peacefully asleep in a corner of the car.

Hints to the Hostess.

This is the time of the year when every woman who has a home is inviting friends to visit her. For some reason the summer season is the most popular time for visiting, and with the guest in our home we must think how best to entertain him or her, as the case may be. It is a curious fact, but nevertheless a true one, as many hostesses have discovered, that the less effort made at entertaining the greater success will result. Those who entertain well and often invariably follow one rule. They put themselves in the place of the guest and consider things from his point of view. The result is usually naturalness on the part of the hostess and a thoroughly good time for the visitor.

No guest wants to be constantly entertained; it is wearing physically and mentally. If the average hostess would only realize that the truest hospitality is the simplest; the simple taking of the guest into the family circle, to make him completely one of that circle and give him as much freedom of thought and action as have the other members of the family, the whole quality of our entertaining would change. When we ask any one to our table and the shelter of our roof we show that one the highest and most intimate compliment we can. There is none higher, and nothing is added to that tribute, but much is detracted from it, keeping him busy every moment.

Exactly True.

"Sometimes a virtue can be exaggerated until it becomes a vice," said the earnest adviser.

"I see exactly what you're comin' at," replied Tarantula Tim. "Whereas four aces is a blessin' an' greatly to be admired, five of 'em kin create untold dissension."

On Women's Clubs.

"I attended a session of my wife's culture club last evening."

"What did the ladies discuss?"

"Henry VIII. Also some fresher scandal."

But He Didn't Eat It.

"Where's that cement—that sack I bought?" the husband sternly said.

"Oh, dear," his wife said, "was it that? I made it into bread."

Recipes.

Cucumber Relish—One dozen cucumbers chopped, half dozen onions, salt to taste, drain in colander. Take one pint vinegar, one cup sugar. One teaspoon celery seed, one teaspoon cinnamon, one teaspoon mustard, one red pepper, one-half teaspoon ginger. Pour over cucumbers let boil up good, stir and seal hot.

Cherry and Currant Marmalade—Stone six pounds large ripe cherries and put into a preserving kettle. Simmer gently until reduced one-half, stirring often to prevent sticking. Put half the pits in a wooden bowl and mash with a pestle or stone. Add two pounds currants and mash also, then strain. Add the liquid to the cherries, cook 15 minutes, add six pounds sugar and stir and boil until the marmalade thickens like jelly. Skim and fill small pots or glasses.

Currant and Cherry Preserve—Put three quarts stemmed and washed currants in the preserving kettle and cook until the juice begins to exude. Crush and strain through cheesecloth to get all the juice. Have in readiness 12 quarts cherries, pitted and put into a preserving kettle with the juice of the currants and eight pounds of sugar. Heat slowly to the boiling water point, skim and simmer 15 minutes or until the cherries look clear. Pour into small jars or glasses and seal. If more acid is desired half the quantity of sugar may be used.

Green Currant Jam—To make jam, pick the currants from the stem, put in a preserving kettle and set in a larger kettle of boiling water, or over a gentle fire, to dry out superfluous juice. Add three-quarters of a pound of sugar for each pound of fruit; boil quickly for 30 minutes, or less if it shows signs of jelling. Stir and skim often. Turn into jars and cover when cold.

Helpful Hints

Many like just a suggestion of onion in mayonnaise or other salad dressing. This may be brought about by putting just a tiny piece of onion in the vinegar crock.

For easy boot-cleaning brush the boots free from dust; then with a bit of rag rub a little glycerine well into the leather. Let nearly dry; then rub with a soft brush.

By pouring a little olive oil over a soft linen cloth and gently rubbing over the surface of mahogany furniture, the dust and white color caused by dampness will be removed.

Carpets should be beaten on the wrong side first, and then, more gently, on the right. Never put a carpet down on a damp floor, for this often results in the carpet becoming mildewed.

To prepare caramel sweet potatoes boil and slice the potatoes and dip them first in melted butter and then in granulated sugar. Put into a hot oven until a coating of brown caramel is formed.

Never neglect to moisten linen that is to be drawn, using a damp rag or small sponge. The threads will pull more easily if the line to be drawn is rubbed with soap after being moistened.

Lavender should be gathered before frost touches it, dried in the house; then cut into small pieces, stalk as well as flowers, and packed tightly into small bags, to be put away among the clothing.

A bottle that has contained catsup is difficult to clean. If cold water is poured into it and allowed to stand the work will be greatly simplified. Hot water has a tendency to harden the catsup.

For Lice on Poultry.

From a poultryman in Chester, Pa., State Zoologist, H. A. Surface, received at Harrisburg a letter, stating that his poultry is infected with lice of different kinds, and asked what to do to destroy them. The reply was follows:

"There are two distinct groups of Chicken lice, the little red ones which are mostly on the fowls at night, and remain during the day on perches or in the nests, or elsewhere in the poultry house, or near the roosting places; and, second, those which remain on the fowls practically all the time. These are generally larger, and gray in color.

For the former, the best thing to do is to spray the poultry house thoroughly with kerosene or kerosene emulsion, or strong lime-sulfur-solution, or strong soap solution, or perhaps best of all a five per cent, kerosene solution. One part creolin in twenty parts of water will destroy everyone that it touches, and will act as a fungicide to destroy disease germs, as well as destroying the lice. At the same time, change the straw in the nests, burning the old straw, and spray or wash the empty nest boxes.

For the lice on the fowls, you should dust them with a mixture of flowers of sulfur, hellbore, tobacco dust, and pyrethrum, about equal parts, holding the fowls by the feet head downward, and rub this dust well into the feathers. I think you can obtain some literature on this subject from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C."

Costumes for Motoring.

Dressing nowadays is not the simple matter it used to be and the well groomed woman has learned to be prepared for almost any contingency.

For intance, to motor some distance into the country to a luncheon requires some forethought in the art of dressing to look at all well on one's arrival. It is always safe in this case to fall back on a neat coat and skirt, preferably in a fine dark blue serge with a smart blouse of broderie anglaise or fine cambric with a touch of dark blue. The hat, too, is a subject on which it is necessary to bestow much serious consideration, as this should be of a nature to sit well on the head, so as not to make the wearer present a dishevelled and worried appearance, as is caused by ill-fitting and inappropriate headgear.

There is an art in trying on a veil which few women have mastered. It really takes the exercise of no little skill and ingenuity and incidentally an unlimited supply of pins and patience—to make it behave as it should, The average American woman possesses a wonderful knack in tying on her veils. On the other hand there are some women who appear to entirely lack this faculty and have never been known yet to fasten a veil on either becomingly or securely.

Care of the Eye.

Never rub the eyes, for this practice causes inflammation of the lids, and however beautiful the expression if the eyes are red or without lashes they lose their charm.

When a foreign substance gets into the eye, do not irritate it by trying to force it out. Keep the eye closed for a few moments or until the object is removed by the tears which will flow.

If the wind has reddened the eyelids, wash them in slightly salted warm water.

Veils, especially dotted ones, are very injurious to the eyes. They should therefore, only be used during the winter as a protection against cold.

Late hours and artificial light redden and fatigue the eyes. Lamps should be supplied with shades. It is dangerous to gaze at the sun or electric light. Gas light, candles, ordinary lamps should be shaded by screens.

Reflections of light on white walls, or on long stretches of dusty road or on snow, are very fatiguing to the eyes when not protected by dark glasses.

However strong the eyes may be, give them a little rest after a few hours' continuous use. Never force them to gaze at minute objects when they are weak. Neither read, write nor sew when the light is dim. During all continuous work, close the eyes from time to time at intervals.

The Bath Towel Hat.

Fashion's fancies often lead her followers a strange dance. The latest fad from Paris is the washrag hat. There may be those who will not believe that so humble a cloth could be utilized by Dame Fashion, but the latest thing in millinery is nothing more nor less than a Turkish bath towel. Yet it must not be supposed that because the material is plebeian that the hat is too—far from it. It is undoubtedly a very chic affair, in a smart and becoming shape, usually lined with black velvet and ornamented with black velvet bows.

No, it will not wash and is not designed from this economical point of view. In seashore wear and mountain strolls the bath towel hat is the smartest thing of the summer season.

The woman who is clever with her needle might copy a hat of this kind. The cost could not possibly amount to much, as the materials used are inexpensive. After selecting a becoming wire frame, cover it with Turkish toweling and ornament with velvet in any desired shade. An old winter hat might be disguised in the same way.

Pa—No, my son. Some of them are called women.

"INFLOONCE."

The Hon. P. Gray Meek, and the Hon. Johnny Noll, and the Hon. "Doc" White all went to Harrisburg to exhibit their "Infloonce" over Democratic County Chairman Kimport. Said "Infloonce" lasted all the way to Harrisburg. There it went upon the bargain counter. Kimpy gave the Meek-Noll-White-body-guard the slip and voted for Guthrie for State Chairman—the same Guthrie who has many times bitterly fought the Democratic ticket.

Here's offering a big black cigar for a first-handed version of what the "Inflooential" trio said about Kimpy.

Possibly had they taken Jim. Cornelly along there might have been some real "infloonce" with which to swing Kimpy into line.

Politics and Wool.

With the disposal of the Canadian reciprocity bill assured by the agreement in the Senate to vote upon it next Saturday when it will unquestionably be passed by a large majority in the identical form in which it passed the House, interest in the subsequent action of the extra session of Congress now centers upon the action of the Senate as regards the proposed revision of the wool schedule of the present tariff act. That early action will be had, so far as the upper house is concerned, is also assured by the agreement to vote on the House bill now before the Senate on July 27. The question is: Will that bill or any other bill revising Schedule K meet the approval of both House and Senate, and if it does will the President sign it?

There will be two wool revision bills for the Senate to consider, according to the present outlook, one the Underwood bill already passed by the House and now before the Senate with an adverse report from the Finance Committee, and the other a measure which Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, bitter opponent of President Taft's renomination, intends to offer as a substitute. There is this striking difference between these two measures; the Underwood bill proposes to substitute ad volorem for specific rates, the general average of the entire schedule being 30 per cent., while the measure devised by Senator La Follette imposes both ad valorem and specific duties, as does the present law, the difference being that the Wisconsin tinker proposes material cuts in differentials in woolen cloth while increasing the rates on raw wool to the total, according to Mr. Underwood, Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, of 60 per cent. as compared with 44½ per cent. in the Payne-Aldrich law and 20 per cent. proposed in the House bill.

According to the prediction of some of the Republican leaders of the Senate—including Senators Smoot and Crane, friends of present law, and Senator Williams of Mississippi, Democrat—one of these bills, or a compromise between them, will pass both houses as a result of a combination between the Democrats and the Republican insurgents of the Senate. Representative Underwood is quoted in Washington despatches as stating that the La Follette bill would not be acceptable to the House. But the possibility of an agreement in conference on some measure of revision of the present wool schedule has come to be generally recognized within the last few days at both ends of the Capitol.

What would President Taft do should such a bill reach him? It is reasonable to assume, as is freely predicted in Washington, although without definite authority, that he would veto it. He is on record as being convinced that Schedule K of the present law imposes more than reasonable or equitable duties on wool, but he is also on record as having insisted that revision of the tariff in all particulars should properly wait upon the action of the Tariff Board, which cannot prepare the comprehensive report which it is now engaged upon before December next, when the first regular session of the present Congress will convene. It is certain that those Republican insurgents of the Senate who are willing to further the political and personal schemes of Senator La Follette will join the latter in any attempt to embarrass President Taft. But it is no less certain that Mr. Taft is not lacking in the courage necessary to interpose his veto of any ill-considered measure of tariff revision regardless of any temporary political advantage which either insurgents or Democrats might appear to gain by drawing out such a veto with the object of "putting the President in a hole."

Insistance by the President that revision of the wool schedule, although he himself in common with many other Republicans has advocated it, shall be based on the expert information and advice of the Tariff Board and not undertaken for purely political purposes in advance of its report next December would be understood and approved by the country.—Phila. Press.

MAY VETO ORDINANCE

And then a happy idea suggested itself to Council. Why not refer the matter to Borough Solicitor Mitchell? Glad of the opportunity to hurdle the entire subject and put it off for the time being at least, everybody gleefully voted aye. It is now up to Borough Solicitor Mitchell to show Council how to get rid of the sign and at the same time preserve peace between the two doctors.

William Walker appeared before Council and demanded to know why sidewalks had not been laid on the Bush and Brew estate properties on South Thomas Street. He stated that the matter had been dragging along for several years and that residents of that section had become thoroughly tired of tramping through mud every time it rains. Council later directed that ten days' notice be given the property owners to lay proper sidewalks, with the alternative of having the work done by the borough. Secretary Kelley was directed to notify Mrs. G. Murry Andrews to lay a new sidewalk along her property, on Howard Street, at the intersection of Allegheny Street.

The Misses Hoy filed written notice on Council that the construction of the new State road had resulted in damage to the several properties known as the Beaver-Hoy row and that the borough would be held responsible.

Jerry Lutz offered Council the use of abandoned ore banks on the old Jim. Curtin farm, on the Zion road, below town, as a dumping ground for ashes. The proposition is entirely experimental and is for one month, only. Mr. Lutz is to receive $5 for the use of his lands. Dumping of paper, etc., is prohibited. If the plan works out all right the site may be secured as a dumping ground for many years. Draymen may dump ashes on the ground during the next month, but not without a permit from the Sanitation Committee of Council.

Hard P. Harris was named as Centre County's representative to co-operate with a representative of Blair County in auditing the books of the Pruner Orphanage this year.

Council took up but did not dispose of the question of the tax millage for the coming year. A special meeting may be called to fix the rate of millage.

Death at Howard.

Mrs. M. L. Beck, a well known and highly respected resident of Howard, died at her late home at that place on Thursday, July 13, aged 67 years. Deceased betore her marriage was Agnes A. Furst, and was a daughter of Mrs. Leah Furst. She was raised in Clinton County, and in 1880 was married to M. L. Beck, of Nittany. They resided at that place until about four years ago, when they removed to Howard. Earlier in life she resided with her parents in Shelby County, Illinois, where both parents died. While in the West she united with the Presbyterian church, but after removing to Nittany she identified herself with the Lutheran church, remaining a consistent member and leading an exemplary life to the time of her death. She was always willing and desirous of assisting those in sorrow and distress and by her many splendid qualities endeared herself to a large circle of admiring friends. Her death was caused by cancer, and although suffering intensely at times she patiently bore her suffering and heroically awaited the final summons. Her passing away seemed to carry with it a beautiful reward, for she slept peacefully into death. Funeral services were held from her late residence on Monday, at noon, conducted by Rev. L. N. Fleck, of Newry, Pa., and Rev. Mr. Minnemyer, of Nittany. Her remains were conveyed to Nittany valley and tenderly laid to rest in the cemetery at Jacksonville. Surviving Mrs. Beck are her husband and three brothers, as follows: Wells M. Beck, of Monte Vista, Colorado; Orlando C. Beck, of Everett, Washington, and Luther Thomas Beck, of Abilena, Kansas.

Preaching at Milesburg.

Rev. E. C. Houck, who was well known as a Baptist minister in Milesburg in 1902, is visiting at that place for a few days and on Sunday morning, next, at 11 o'clock, he will preach in the Milesburg Presbyterian church. The services will be under the auspices of the Milesburg Baptist church. Their edifice is undergoing repairs and the Presbyterians very gracefully offered the use of their church for those desirous of hearing Mr. Houck preach. It is expected that a large congregation will attend.

Williams Reunion Aug. 19.

The annual Williams reunion will be held August 19, in John Q. Miles' grove, near Martha. Announcement of the selection of this date was made following a meeting of the committee on arrangements on Saturday evening, last. Walter H. Williams, D. J. Gingery and O. D. Eberts were named as the committee on entertainment and athletics. The committee on transportation is composed of G. G. Fink, Harry S. Williams and George W. Bullock. The committee on obtiuary comprises W. H. Williams, Ida R. Williams and John M. Williams. An interesting program of amusements is being arranged for the picnic. A feature will be baseball games, possibly a game in the morning and also one in the afternoon. The Williams reunion is always one of the most delightful social functions in Centre County and it is expected that this year's picnic will be up to the high standard of those of other years.

A Glimpse of Bismarck.

Lord Goschen was once asked to dinner by the German chancellor and described the occasion in his memoirs: "Bismarck made an excellent dinner, but not so good as I expected. The fish course consisted of lampreys, and Bismarck said that he had once, to his shame, eaten eighty-one at a sitting. Lord Odo, remembering the fate of a British king, asked if he had no reason to regret the feat. 'Yes,' he said, 'I did regret it. I have often regretted what I have eaten, but never what I have drunk.' 'But have you not been the worse for it?' 'I did not say I had not been the worse for my potations. I said I had never regretted them.' He spoke in slow but good English and said a number of quaint and good things. Here is a very characteristic specimen: 'I rather envy you English statesmen the excitement of the house of commons. You have the pleasure of being able to call a man a damned infernal scoundrel. Now, I can't do that in diplomacy.'"

History of Smallpox.

That terrible disease, smallpox, appears to have been first described by Rhazes, an Arabian physician who lived about the year 900, but there is no reason to doubt that it has existed in the east from the remotest times. So far as we know, it never originated spontaneously, but is always produced by contact—mediate or immediate—with a person already affected by it. It appears to have been introduced in Europe in the times of the crusades and spread slowly into the more northern regions. In 1733 it appeared in Iceland, where it was so fatal that the country was almost depopulated by it. From Spain it was carried to Mexico, where it is said to have destroyed 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 people. It spread rapidly all over the new world, and whole villages and tribes of Indians were carried off by it.

Canton's City of the Dead.

In Canton, about eighty miles from Hongkong, there is a place known as the City of the Dead. There are 194 small houses, in each of which a corpse is lodged, at the rate of $25 for the first three months and then at a reduced rate until the geomancers employed by the relatives of the dead person decide when and where the corpse shall be buried. Silk or paper lanterns and imitation fruit are hung from the roof; there are screens in each room between the door and the coffin; tea, fruit and any other kind of food which the dead person liked when on earth are placed on an altar before the coffin each morning. There are cardboard servants standing about to wait on him with pipes or cardboard cups of tea. There are also two handsome paper females placed there to guide his spirit on the way to heaven.

Saved by a Dream.

A farmer living at Lapford, England, dreamed thrice in succession that he saw a pit dug in one of his fields and some of his property cast into it. At the third time of dreaming he got up, dressed and went out. He heard the thud of a spade and caught sight of a man digging by lantern light. The digger fled at his approach. It was a grave upon which he had been at work. By its brink lay a huge knife. On his way back the farmer met one of his maidservants. She had had a quarrel with the man to whom she had been engaged, she said, but he had prevailed upon her to meet him for the last time at 2 o'clock that morning, when he had something to show her. "This is what he had to show you," said the farmer, leading her to the grave.—London Tatler.

Lost Bark.

Muggins, seeing a dead dog in the ditch, stopped and, after gazing intently at it, said to his companion, "Another shipwreck."

"Where?"

"There lies a bark that is lost forever."

His companion growled and navigated on.—Exchange.

An Interesting Relic.

A. W. Houser, of Pleasant Gap, who is a regular reader of "The Republican", recently exhibited at this office a very interesting relic of the Civil war which he found on a farm in West Virginia. The relic in question was an old iron shell, such as were used in cannons during the Civil war and which caused untold loss of life to both the Union and Confederate armies. In Pocohontas County, West Virginia, near the State line, and Highland County, Virginia, there are two forts standing out as grim reminders of the conflict between the North and the South. The one fort is 50 feet in diameter, surrounded by a 3-foot wall. There were three cannon in each fort on the old Staunton turnpike leading from Staunton to Clarksburg, West Virginia. About 200 were killed on both sides at Bartow, West Virginia. About five miles from these forts there are five others built on the same principle as those mentioned. They are on the farm of W. B. Freeman, a native of West Virginia, who lived on farm upward of fifty years. He fought for the Union. Bartow is about 60 years old. Durbin is a lumber town, established some ten years or more ago by the Lumber Company of Pennsylvania. It is supposed that the shell found by Mr. Houser was one fired during the Battle on the Alleghenies—the natives say it was a skirmish. The shell was found two miles north of the forts. Most of the farms in and about the forts were never worked after the war, the furrows of the plow being plainly seen even to this day.

C. Foster, any questions affecting their trees and thus receive help without any special request.

It Was a Sleeve Button, but It Convicted a Murderer

By ANDREW C. EWING

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A man was dining in an Italian restaurant in New York when two other men entered.

"Hello, Fabroni!" exclaimed one of the two who entered.

"Hello yourself, Zanella. Sit down at this table."

"I have a friend with me."

"There is room for your friend, too, and I shall be happy to know him."

"Giuseppe, Attanasio, this is my friend Andrea Fabroni."

The two men who were thus introduced stretched forth a hand each to the other. In doing so Attanasio's coat sleeve was raised, exposing his cuff. Fabroni's eyes lighted on the linked button, but only for the fraction of a second—indeed, not long enough for Attanasio to notice that Fabroni repressed a start.

"What are you doing now, Fabroni?" asked Zanella after the party had been seated.

"I have taken an agency for an olive oil house in Naples," said the man addressed. "I shall open an office soon with a warehouse in rear."

"You like New York?"

"Very much. The bay here is not the bay of Naples, but the city is better adapted to money making than Naples. Are you a resident here, Senor Attanasio?"

"Temporarily. I am looking for a business opening."

"You will need some capital. There is room in the importing of foreign fruits."

"Thank you for the information. I shall look into the matter."

"Have you been here long?" asked Fabroni of Attanasio.

"A couple of weeks."

"What news did you bring from our Carissima Italia? When I left every one was talking about the Archeopoli murder."

When Fabroni said this his eyes were fixed upon those of Attanasio. It seemed to Zanella, who had been looking over the menu and at the moment raised his eyes, that this merely happened so, but he was surprised to notice a slight change come over the countenance of the man addressed.

"There was nothing of importance taking place when I sailed," said Attanasio

"Had the police got any clew as to who murdered Archeopoli?"

"I don't know."

"Do you think that fellow Di Guida had anything to do with it?"

"It was the general opinion when I left that he was the murderer."

"Is there any evidence to prove it?"

"I really don't know. These criminal matters don't interest me. They are grewsome affairs."

Attanasio spoke impatiently.

"The only reason I don't like New York," said Fabroni, "is the bad name these Black Hand people give us Italians. I'm almost ashamed to look an American in the face and own I am an Italian. New York is full of our countrymen who should be behind bars. As soon as one of our criminals at home does something to cause the sleepy police to wake up and go for him he skips over here."

"The carabinieri are not lazy," remarked Zanella.

"Yes, but they pride themselves so far on being a national police that they have no stomach for such cases as they think belong to the municipal force. They could if they would, but they won't. It is my opinion that if the government had put the carabinieri on the Archeopoli murder case as soon as it occurred they would have secured the murderer. As it is, he has got away safely enough. Likely he has come over here."

When Fabroni spoke this last sentence he again fixed his eyes on those of Attanasio. But the latter as soon as the conversation had been turned back to criminal matters sat drumming with his fingers on the table as though, not relishing such talk, he preferred to drop out of it.

"These criminals"— Fabroni was beginning again when Zanella interrupted him.

"Oh, sink criminals!" he said. "Let's find something better to converse upon. Do you think our people at home will ever be able to disband our army and save the cost of supporting 300,000 idle men?"

"We may," said Fabroni, "if we wish to see some of our old enemies come down on us and occupy our territory again. That's what has ruined us. Bad government is what has made so many criminals"—

"Criminals again!" exclaimed Attanasio. "Your friend, my dear Zanella, has criminal on the brain."

"Really, gentlemen," Fabroni went on, "you must permit me to finish. We have had more bad government in Naples than any other part of Europe, and that is what has made so many of our people cutthroats. I wish to tell you one bit of criminality, and then I will let up. It is a matter that was told me by a friend of mine in the municipal police of Naples. It is about a murder perpetrated not long ago. A member of the celebrated Camorra had got rich by his robberies and wished to live a life of ease without danger. To get rid of those of the Camorra who knew about his transactions he informed upon them. No sooner had he done so than he was condemned to die."

The speaker paused and sipped his wine. Zanella glanced at his friend Attanasio and saw that Fabroni's story was having a powerful effect on him. He fingered his glass nervously, and his restless eye was never fixed but for a few moments on any object.

"A man whom we will call Amadeo," continued Fabroni, "was deputed to do the deed. He and the person to be dispatched had been and were supposed to be bosom friends. He knew the doomed man's residence, the room he slept in and how to get in and out without being seen. One night he climbed a lattice, got on a roof, entered his friend's room, and—well, the next morning his friend was found dead in his bed and quantities of jewelry he had gained by stealth were missing. The stealing of the jewelry was to give the impression that the man had been murdered for that especially."

The speaker again paused and took a sip of wine. Attanasio had become more and more agitated till he was now trembling.

"Go ahead," said Zanella, "if you will give us your horrid stories, and get through with it."

"Be patient. I am nearly finished. The murder was reported to the police, who at once took possession of the premises. On the floor they found an article of jewelry that had been doubtless dropped by the murderer in his hurry. It would form a good clew if its mate—for it was one of two—could be found on any one. The case was put into the hands of Marshal Rizzuto of the carabinieri, who at once began investigations. He learned that the murdered man's intimate friend, Amadeo, was missing. The problem was to find Amadeo.

"But to do this he must first gain the confidence of the man's friends. Rizzuto disguised himself as a peddler of trinkets such as are sold on the streets of Naples for a few centesimi each to tourists, mostly Americans, and, making his living in this way, he was not suspected when he told certain criminals that he would like to go into crime as a means of subsistence. He was not long in finding persons who were anxious to help him for a share of the plunder. But his ultimate object was to effect an entrance into the noble society of the Camorra as the only way to hear of Amadeo. He failed in this, but learned the whereabouts of his man in another way. One of Amadeo's former acquaintances, an Italian American, wrote anonymously to the commander of the carabinieri that he had seen Amadeo, whom he knew to be wanted for the Archeopoli murder, in New York."

The story was drawing to a close, and Attanasio looked as if it had been wound about him as an anaconda will wind itself about its prey. He looked for a loophole for escape, but none appeared. Besides, the story teller was holding him with his eyes.

"Rizzuto," continued Fabroni, "at once took a steamer for America. Arriving in New York, he sought some information of Amadeo. Unfortunately he had never seen the murderer, and there were no pictures of him. Rizzuto, too, visited many Italian resorts, but made no headway. One day he went into an Italian restaurant to dine. An acquaintance came in with a friend, whom he introduced to Rizzuto. In stretching forth his arm this man displayed a linked cuff button."

The speaker paused again to fix his eyes on Attanasio. They seemed to paralyze the man. Then Fabroni added:

"Pull up your coat sleeve, please."

Attanasio reluctantly and with a trembling hand did as he was told. Fabroni put his thumb and finger in his vest pocket and pulled out a link cuff button. It matched the one displayed.

"Raise the other sleeve, please."

Attanasio, with the same reluctance, obeyed the order. The two buttons were not mates.

"Chance," exclaimed Fabroni, "or, rather, Amadeo's foolhardiness or vanity, gave Rizzuto not only a clew but absolute proof as to the identity of his man."

The story teller turned to Zanella. "Pardon me," he said, "for inflicting upon you this uninteresting story. I have really been operating the third degree upon your friend, Senor Attanasio. I came here to find him, and, as I have said, blind luck and his own folly have delivered him into my hands. You may introduce me aright as Marshal Rizzuto of the National Italian carabinieri."

Attanasio quick as a flash put his hand under his coat and drew a knife, which he raised ready to strike his tormentor, but the eye of the carabinier never for a moment left that of the man he wanted and saw the design before it had even begun to be executed. A cocked revolver was thrust under the criminal's nose before he could bring the stiletto down. Then Zanella took the weapon, and this flash in the pan was all that interfered with the arrest. Some disturbance was caused in the restaurant by the scene, and, the landlord coming over to the table where it occurred, Rizzuto said to him calmly:

"The police, please."

While the telephone bell was ringing the criminal, recovering something of his nerve, said to the carabinier:

"I can put you on to a far more important person or persons than myself. Leave me out and take them in."

"Who are they?"

"Petrosino's murderers."

"If you know anything about those men you will have to tell it to the officers of the law. I have no authority to deal with you in that matter."

A VISIT TO INDIANA.

The Home of a Thousand Ambitions—Where More Teachers Are Trained for Their Work Than at Any Other Normal School in the State.

THE BUSY, HEALTHFUL DAYS OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

How They Learn to Teach by Actual Teaching — Their Eagerness at Work and at Play.

More than one hundred of the teachers in Pittsburgh to-day are graduates of one Normal School. In this State there are many hundreds of teachers at work who were trained at this one school. This month another hundred trained teachers graduated from this one school; and next year practically all of them will be holding positions in Pennsylvania school rooms.

There can be, then, very few things of more vital interest to you than this institution—the largest and most important Normal School in Pennsylvania.

Suppose we take a trip to Indiana, the school where a thousand teachers are being equipped for their life work. You will find this forming of character and directing of ambitions a more fascinating study than the most intricate machinery of great factories. If people realized how interesting schools were to study they would visit them more often.

Indiana is a county-seat village in the Allegheny foothills, three hours' ride from Pittsburgh. The Pennsylvania State Normal School—we shall call it by its more popular title "Indiana" hereafter—is just outside the village on a rising slope of ground. The campus is a large one, well dotted with big, old trees. The buildings are of stone and brick, attractively and conveniently arranged.

Very early the visitor loses the impression given by the word "school;" there is more of the atmosphere of the college or university about this institution. It is a big place, surprisingly big. There are more people about than one expected to see. One soon begins to realize that a thousand students, a faculty of forty-three, and workers and servants for all these make up quite a community.

The second impression the stranger has it that of orderliness—the sort that comes from purpose well directed rather than from restraint or discipline imposed by the ones in authority. If you approach the main building at the close of a class period you will see several hundred girls moving quickly and quietly from class room to class room or from class room to their dormitories. The boys at Indiana number about three hundred, the girls 700.

YOUNG PEOPLE WHO ARE IN EARNEST.

These young people are by no means solemn or unnaturally subdued; but there is no undue hilarity; they are seriously busy—they are in earnest.

They are naturally more in earnest than the average undergraduate at a popular university. Serious purpose gives concentration and this virtue has been fostered very carefully by the principal and faculty; they realize its great value to the students individually, and to the school.

CLASSES—INDOORS AND OUT.

The class rooms and recitations at Indiana are very like those in the best of modern colleges. The buildings are splendidly lighted, the rooms are large, the equipment exceptionally complete and up-to-date. In looking through the day's work you are likely to notice that physical culture exercises are given; and the class in manual training—they may be weaving baskets or building a music cabinet when you call—will hold your interest. You may catch sight of a class in Zoology or Botany returning from a trip into the country, bearing their specimens. That group you noticed at a far corner on the campus is made up of seniors working at surveying.

The great advantages of school life away from the city impress you more and more. The quiet and the clear, health-giving air; the atmosphere of earnest work and studious hours; the advantages for those very important studies which take us back to nature—all these are points in favor of the school that is near the "country."

Now to make a tour of the buildings and to glance into the many class rooms. In addition to the courses given by all schools you will find a very complete course in art; away up in a wing of the central building are several rooms for piano practice—there is a Normal Conservatory at Indiana which not only develops the students' abilities to execute music but also to teach music.

No wonder these girls and boys move briskly and eagerly. They have no time to waste; they are all very busy.

A THOUSAND AT LUNCHEON.

Now a bell rings and we see everybody moving one way—no bustle or hurry, but as usual, no waste of time, either.

They are going to luncheon—the midday meal is the lighter one because there is still a good deal of brain work to be done.

If you have never taken a meal with a thousand young people in one big, sunlighted room you have missed an interesting hour. The routine of this great dining hall runs smoothly; you get a simple meal of good food; if you are appreciative you notice that the bread is homemade and delicious, the butter and tea are excellent. Everything is good, everything is well cooked. You are likely to notice these particular things because—well, you know, these are the things that are so often not of the best where a great number are served. Luncheon is served promptly. As quickly as it was filled the great, bright dining hall is deserted. The students have nearly an hour of freedom now.

There are girls everywhere. You see them chatting in the great halls, where luxurious sofas and chairs form many social corners. They lounge in the Red Room before the open fireplace and everywhere they seem very cheerful, very much at home. Evidently they know that all of these comforts are here for their enjoyment. Groups of girls are walking about the campus. A tennis game is starting. The boys are practicing on the ball field.

THE MODEL SCHOOL—WHERE STUDENTS TEACH.

Now school begins again. That handsome new building nearest to the village is the Model School. A troupe of little tots have filed in and taken their seats in the eight rooms. There are about 400 of them and they come from Indiana to receive free tuition. Seniors of the Normal School are the teachers, working under the careful scrutiny and criticism of experienced instructors. Of all the class rooms these are the most entertaining. Here the guiding principle of the great school, "practical training for real service," is best illustrated. Two Seniors work in each grade—the Model School has eight grades—at one time, one actively teaching, the other observing, planning and—at the close—criticising.

After watching this school you begin to see why experienced employers consider Indiana graduates better than others. These young teachers have had one year of real experience—experience under the illuminating guidance of thoroughly trained instructors.

HOW THE TABLES ARE SUPPLIED.

Did you ever go through the kitchens, bakeries and ice rooms of a big hotel? They are like those at Indiana—only these at the school are brighter and cleaner than you'll find at most hotels. In the Cold Storage Plant you will see row after row of good beef hanging in a temperature always at the freezing point. In the adjoining room—not quite so cold—are stored the milk, eggs and butter. Next door—a slightly different temperature—you find the vegetables. Here is one of the great secrets of health and strength, food of the best always at its best.

Do you know that a large school must have an ice plant, or else must sometimes feed its people on meats chemically treated? And that very few schools have ice plants? It is worth remembering.

KITCHENS AND BAKERIES.

The kitchens are large and brightly lighted. They are on the ground floor. Every equipment of modern science is here to do justice to this important part of keeping a thousand young people in perfect health.

The bakery will give you another appetite. They are preparing the rolls for dinner now. All the bread of Indiana is home made. Both bakeries and kitchens are in charge of efficient and skilled workers.

The laundry and the neat, comfortable rooms of the servants are also on this ground floor.

This end of the school is really a marvel of management. Many a visitor has expressed surprise, asking how everything can be done so perfectly at the small rate charged the students. In passing it may be mentioned that several of the most important hotels in the East have made the Principal at Indiana very flattering offers to give up teaching and to accept the post of hotel manager.

WHERE THE GIRLS LIVE.

Now we will take the elevator—very few schools have these, you know—and look into the rooms where the girls study and sleep. Indiana, the teachers admit, is a bit crowded. Not so crowded, however, as to bring any discomfort. Most of the girls live two in a room—there are a few small single rooms, and other large rooms accommodate three girls in each. The essentials, light, fresh air and comfortable beds and chairs, are given to all. The rooms are dainty and well kept, the girls being their own housekeepers to a large extent.

TRAINED TO KEEP HOUSE.

Here you may notice a training these young ladies get, more than half unconsciously on their part, in housekeeping. The furnishings and decorations are exceptionally good in quality and taste all through the buildings. The girls have their own kitchen and dining room for "spreads" and "suppers;" they have their own "Green Room" for social good times—and these rooms as well as their living rooms they keep in order without help from authorities or servants. The idea behind this is that they will learn to appreciate and care for the beautiful in home life by sharing the responsibility as well as the pleasure in these things.

THE INFIRMARY.

On the south side of an upper floor of the dormitory—Sutton Hall—are several rooms facing south and flooded with sun in winter. These constitute the Infirmary. Here, when illness comes, the patient is kept under the care of trained nurses. All meals for patients are cooked and served in this department.

THE BOYS' QUARTERS.

Across the campus stands Clark Hall, the home of the boys. Their halls and rooms are less luxurious than those of the girls—just solid comfort and healthful quarters. This hall fronts upon that part of the campus where the tennis courts and baseball grounds are.

ATHLETICS AND RECREATION.

It is getting on into the afternoon now. Four hundred children have filed out of the Model School and gone back to the village. The girls are coming out by groups upon the campus, walking and talking as though they had a little time for rest.

Athletics form an important part in Indiana life. The boys have done so well that they have been forced to step up a grade and play against the teams of colleges. In spite of this they are more than holding their own, having won this year "The Relay" at the University of Pennsylvania with athletes from the following institutions in the race: Washington and Jefferson college, Maryland Agricultural college, Dickinson college, College of the City of New York, Lehigh university, University of Maryland, Villanova college and Ursinus college. Indiana also won the meet this spring at State college.

Last fall Indiana maintained the champion foot ball team among schools of its class in Pennsylvania, and those who know claim that the football team for the coming year will be the best in the history of the school.

The girls have basket ball and tennis teams. They have a May Pole Dance and in June they give a play under the trees. Part of the Commencement Exercises are held on the campus, too. There is plenty of out-of-door life for all at Indiana.

Now you've had a passing glimpse at the school where teachers are trained. There is more to see. If you are interested in schools or if you have a daughter or son at Indiana there is a private room there always at your disposal. Stay a day or two. The most interesting study in the world is people and young people are the best to study—especially when they are ambitious and in earnest.

The Crops.

Rains and cooler weather give a more optimistic tinge to crop reports. Corn crop deterioration has been stayed, and there is a disposition to look more cheerfully on crop prospects in the large surplus-producing sections. In Texas and Oklahoma, while the corn crop is apparently beyond redemption, cotton has been helped. In Oklahoma quick-growing forage crops are being planted to take the place of coarse grains and hay that were cut short. Tassel firing by the late extremely hot weather has hurt corn in all the states west of the Mississippi river, but the damage to the crop is not beyond repair if favorable weather rules from now on. East of the Mississippi river, except in Wisconsin, rain has improved corn, and a large crop is possible.

Spring-wheat reports are, on the whole, rather better. South Dakota shows little improvement but North Dakota and Minnesota, except in the southwest, send fairly good reports. The black rust reported in the northwest this week is largely confined to a few counties in west Minnesota and south North Dakota, and the damage is not serious as yet. Spring-wheat harvesting has begun in the southern part of the belt. The Canadian wheat crop reports are good.

Oats harvesting has begun, with yields irregular. Late oats send better reports. There is no doubt that the crop as a whole has been hurt.

Late estimates of the country's hay crop indicate a yield 20 per cent. below last year.

Western pastures are very short and potatoes look poorly. Texas cattle ranges are in poor shape.

Reflections of the effects of the hot wave in the east are found in poor reports as to potatoes, of lighter than expected yields of grain and of injured vegetable crops, such as tomatoes, peas and sweet corn. Canned goods markets are active and higher on these advices.

Cotton crop reports are, on the whole, even better than last week. Rains in north Texas and Oklahoma have helped that crop very materially, thus repairing the only poor spot in the entire belt. In south Texas there is still some complaint of dry weather injuring cotton, but the reports from the eastern half of the belt are the best received at this date in recent years. Rather too much rain is indicated in Mississippi. The boll weevil is reported at work in the lower Mississippi valley but has not yet done any great damage. In Alabama a bumper cotton crop is almost assured, and late corn has improved in that state and thence eastward to the coast.

The large quantity and fine quality of the new wheat movement is attracting attention in the west. On Thursday, July 13, of 330 cars received at Chicago, 495 were of contract grade.

Crop conditions at the beginning of June were slightly below the average, and heat and drought have since then impaired the outlook further. The government report shows that the country's general crop condition on July 1 was 10 per cent. below the average, and the detailed report points to a wheat crop about equal to a year ago, a good gain in flaxseed, but to decreases from a year ago in corn, oats, potatoes, barley, rye, rice and tobacco. In fact, the finest promise held forth by any crop is that by cotton, which still favors a record yield. States east of the Mississippi and the Pacific coast sections promise best, while the poorest promise is in the states making up the western edge of the great plains section from South Dakota to Texas. Prices and conditions in the vegetable markets would seem to indicate that plant growth in those lines has also been restricted or curtailed by long-continued dry weather.—Bradstreet.

Japanese Passenger Traffic.

It was in 1876 that the first railway was opened, connecting Tokio and Yokohama, says the Railway Magazine. Since then new lines have been completed in many directions, and it is now possible to travel from the extreme south to the northern boundary—a distance of more than a thousand miles.

As a people the Japanese have taken to traveling in a remarkable manner. Even in winter the trains are full, while in summer the passengers literally overflow on the footboards at the end of each carriage. The rolling stock is all made in Japan; it is less well cared for than that to which we are accustomed in British Isles, and the compartments are less comfortable, the first-class coaches being about equal to the third-class in England.

But much as the rolling stock may be behind our own, the Japanese methods of handling luggage are infinitely superior, and if the passenger has no more than hand baggage his bicycle is carried free. The names of the stations are displayed in English as well as in Japanese, but although advertising has begun to disfigure the rural beauties of Japan, it has happily not yet reached that advanced stage when it is easy to mistake somebody's cocoa, soap or ink or other commodity for the name of the station. As many of the stations a list in Japanese and English enumerates the places of interest in the neighborhood, and having given the distances at which they will be found adds the words "For further information apply to the station master."

Concerning Clothes.

Woman's craze "to startle and waylay" public attention by her clothes is very obvious. She does so at any price, even sacrificing real sartorial elegance to her desire to attract attention. A day at one of the recent polo matches adequately illustrates this remark.

Among the many regrettable modistic efforts was a young girl attired in a pale mauve diaphanous confection, the upper part arranged exactly like a sweater.

Some of the hats, too, were truly amazing. One lady looked as though she had emptied an entire milliner's box of white wheat and roses on a black hat, while another coquettish young thing, nearly half a century old, wore an infantile cap of white eyelet embroidery, the pointed sides turned back with old rose silk.

If women only knew it simplicity in dress makes much more of an impression than startling gew-gaws and over-trimmed gowns.

Poorly Reported.

Senator Bankhead, discussing an eloquent speech that had been rather poorly reported to a New York paper, said:

"The report spoiled the speech. It was like old Hiram Earwig's account of Daniel Webster's last words.

"Webster, you know, as he lay dying, uttered the profound and significant sentence—'I still live.' Well, Hiram Earwig, of Skeeter Beach, said to a visitor from the city:

"Yawp, life's onsartin. Wot wuz it that thar New Englander said—Webster I think? Yawp, it wuz General Dan Webster. He got off a good thing just afore he died. He riz up in bed and says, says he:

"I ain't dead yit!"

Women and Stocks.

Women speculators have a habit of giving to brokers orders with a string attached to them. A woman who owned some bank stock asked a broker to sell it at 250 if he thought she could not get any more for it. The market in this stock had been inactive for months, and 250 was the highest price ever recorded for it. The next day the broker had a chance to sell the stock at 250. It so happened that on the same day a lively demand for this bank stock developed, and before the day was over it was selling at 300. The broker wrote to his woman customer that he had sold her stock for $250 a share and would she send her certificate to him for delivery to the purchaser? She refused to deliver the stock.

"You ought to have known better than to sell it for 250," she remonstrated. "I am going to sell it today myself for 300."

It was not until the broker appealed to the courts that he succeeded in getting the stock from the woman.—Strand Magazine.

Pretty Fine Scratches.

Most people consider a polished surface as something absolutely smooth—that is, something with no scratches on it whatever. To polish a thing, however, the very reverse is done to it. It is filled with very fine scratches. All eyeglass lenses, glass for mirrors, furniture, etc., are rubbed with fine emery paper and later with an extremely fine powder which gives the finishing touches in the shape of very fine scratches. Now the question arises as to just how fine the scratches must be—that is, how far apart they must be, for big scratches a good distance apart give anything but a polished surface. The answer is that the scratches or ridges between must be less than one-quarter the wave length of the light that falls on the surface for the light to be reflected and thus give the effect of a polished surface. This is less than one two-hundred-thousandth of an inch for light waves. No breaking up of the waves is caused, and they consequently are reflected in their original form.—New York Tribune.

The Offense Defined.

General Craft, an attorney of Terre Haute, Ind., was once called into a jewelry store in the town to settle a dispute.

"See here, general," explained the proprietor, "if I take a watch from Mr. Smith here and make repairs that cost me 10 cents and then keep it hanging up for a week and charge him $6 when he comes to get it, what percentage do I make? We have been figuring for half an hour and only get up to 900 per cent, and that is but a dollar, so we decided to leave it to you."

"Well," said the general gravely, "you must know that it is a fact, and it has been demonstrated by calculating machines, that at certain points in progressive numbers the law governing them changes. In your case the law would change long before it reached the $6 and would run out of percentage and into what is known and designated as larceny."

Open Door and a Light.

The wives of north country colliers observe a very touching and pathetic custom when an accident occurs in the pit. Directly it is known to the wife of a collier that an accident has happened in the pit where her husband works and that his fate is uncertain she throws open the house door, and, however inclement the weather may be, she keeps the door open and a candle burning in the window night and day till the man is brought home, dead or alive. In some cases the door has remained open and the candle alight during several weeks.—London Graphic.

A Curious Superstition.

The ancients believed that the marrow of the human backbone often transformed itself into a serpent. Pliny ("Natural History," volume 10, page 66) says that the marrow of a man's backbone will breed to a snake. The Chinese (Worde's "Eastern Travels") burned the backbone to "destroy serpents that might hatch therefrom."

Amending Dickens.

Have a heart that never hardens, a temper that never tires and a touch that never hurts.—Charles Dickens.

Dear, dear! How long Dickens has been dead! Writing for our day he would have said: Have a liver that never hardens, a tire that never punctures and a touch that never fails to land something.—Life.

He Was a Stayer.

She (desperately)—Don't you believe they will worry over your absence if you fail to return home until such a late hour? He (carelessly)—There's nobody to worry except the landlady, and I make a point to keep her worrying by always owing her a month's board.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Complex Accomplishment.

"I understand you speak French like a native."

"No," replied the student. "I've got the grammar and the accent down pretty fine, but it's hard to learn the gestures."—Exchange.

The Cutthroat Game.

"What is the greatest get-rich-quick scheme you know of?" asked the flimsy financier of his partner.

"Taking money away from other people who want to get rich quick."—Wilmington Star.

To please, one must make up his mind to be taught many things which he already knows by people who do not know them.—Chamfort.

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.

Overlooked.

She had just returned from a shopping tour, tired, but radiant.

He had just returned from the office, tired, but—well, tired.

Quivering with delight at the array of samples snipped from rolls of dress goods, she emptied the contents of her purse into her lap. There was a metalic sound. A look of dismay crossed her face.

"There!" she exclaimed, "I just knew there was something I had forgotten to buy."

"What was it, dear?" he asked, with an assumption of interest.

"I'm sure I don't know," she replied, petulantly, "but I find I have a half dollar left!"

Mrs. Charles Lukenbach was operated on for apendicitis at the Bellefonte hospital on Sunday, last. The operaton was in every way successful and she is recovering nicely.

Mrs. G. Oscar Gray was taken to the Bellefonte hospital for an operation on Sunday, last. It is expected that as a result of the operation her health will be greatly benefited.

C. H. Hockman, of near State College, this week renewed his subscription to "The Republican" another year. During that period Mr. Hockman will also receive the Philadelphia daily "Inquirer," having availed himself of the club offer of $3 a year for the two papers.

The Tyrone "Herald" says: Mrs. Daniel H. Hastings, of Bellefonte; Mrs. Rogers, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Mitchell, and Dr. Joseph M. Brockerhoff, of Bellefonte, composed an automobile party that took supper at the Ward House on Monday evening.

Thomas Moore, at one time one of Bellefonte's most popular citizens, was an arrival in town this week, coming up to see Mrs. Moore, who is here to spend a part of the summer with her mother, Mrs. William Dawson. Tom says things look old-fashioned in Philadelphia.

We are indebted to James McDonald of Julian, for a one dollar bill advancing his subscription another year. Considering the fact that Mr. McDonald took a long "chance" on the fellow with whom he entrusted the money to be delivered to us, we take this means to let him know that it reached us all right.

Old Bellefonte friends of William P. Brew were glad to see him in town this week. With Mrs. Brew and their two children, Mr. Brew visited with Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Fenlan, being enroute to their home in New York. Miss Lucy Brew remained in Bellefonte and will visit for a time with the Fenlans.

Edward Eckenroth came within an ace of going to the hospital or perhaps to automobile heaven a few days ago. While driving his car through Milesburg the machine insisted on leaving the road and climbing a telephone pole. A broken axle and some practical experience, including a good scare, summed up the list of damages.

William D. Rider, one of our valued readers, this week advanced his subscription to "The Republican" another year. William is a Democratic aspirant for nomination for Overseer of the Poor, but he regularly reads "The Republican," first to get all the news and in the second place to find out what others think about the Democratic party.

A crisp dollar bill received a day or two ago insures W. H. Hockenbury receiving "The Republican" another year out in his new home, in Anderson, Indiana. Mr. Hockenbury is a Bellefonte boy who holds a nice position in Anderson and the splendid way in which things are going for him is pretty good indication that he has no thought of returning to Bellefonte in the near future.

Harry Taylor, the hustling agent in Bellefonte for the Adams Express Company, is just a little bit jealous these days of Curt Taylor, who drives the delivery wagon. On Tuesday Curt blossomed forth with a freshly painted delivery wagon and a new brown horse, just received from Philadelphia. The new outfit is a dandy and it isn't any wonder that Agent Taylor wishes he were back on the delivery route.

Mrs. Nathan Baughman, who occupied the tenant house on the Samuel B. Miller farm, recently destroyed by fire, desires to thank all who aided her family during the time of their misfortune. It will be recalled that the fire destroyed virtually everything belonging to the Baughmans. Quite a few persons very thoughtfully presented them with necessities of life, clothing, etc., and Mrs. Baughman is desirous that each person who befriended her should know of her appreciation.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus W. Showers, on Tuesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the contracting parties being Miss Mary Showers and David A. Barlett, both of Bellefonte. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Fred W. Barry, pastor of the Bellefonte Lutheran church. Later in the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Barlett traveled to Unionville in an automobile, at which place they took a train for their honeymoon trip. On their return they will reside in Bellefonte. The bride is a fine young lady and has a host of friends who wish her much happiness. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. David Barlett and holds a responsible position in the offices at the Pennsylvania Railroad freight station here.

Miss Grace Cook is driving a Hupmobile runabout, purchased for her this week by her father, Claude Cook. Although she has been at the steering wheel but a few days she is handling the car with the same confidence and skill displayed by an expert driver.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Cherry announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Minnie Cherry, to Mr. Joseph Lyon Nichols, of Girard, Pa. Mr. Nichols, is a guest at the Cherry home this week. Miss Margaret Dodson, of Tyrone, is visiting Miss Anne Cherry.

If R. A. Beck, the barber, allows his whiskers to grow there will be a special reason for it, and when the time comes, if it does come, "The Republican" will reveal the cause. For the present all we have to say is that minus the whiskers and with his mustache waxed up, a la Emperor William, Beck looks to be just about twenty-five years younger.

We are informed that the First National Nurseries, of Rochester, N. Y., desire a lady or gentleman representative in this section. They are well rated in the commercial reports and state that they have one thousand acres in growing stock. Any one out of employment would do well to write them at once and enclose a copy of this notice. 4

David Chambers and Dr. Edward Harris, while traveling yesterday from Clarence to Bellefonte, encountered a 3-foot yellow rattlesnake, which, they promptly killed. It had eight rattles. While in town Davy had quite a little fun, giving George Beezer a scare with the dead snake. George more than evened up on the day, however, for he succeeded in selling Dr. Harris a nobby Flanders runabout.

The "Initial Paper" at Green's is going fast.

John Lipton, of Erie, is visiting at the Curtin homestead, at Curtin.

Mrs. Edward Richards entertained on Saturday evening in honor of Mrs. Hibbs and Miss Hibbs, of Philadelphia.

Isaiah Zimmerman and daughter, Miss Bertha, of Jefferson County, Kansas, are visiting the former's brother, County Commissioner H. E. Zimmerman. They plan remaining in Centre County for five or six weeks. Mr. Zimmerman went to Kansas 33 years ago and this is his third or fourth trip East since that time. He is a successful farmer and seems to thoroughly like the West. Mr. Zimmerman says that in Jefferson County they have had a bumper wheat crop, although in some other sections of the State the yield was not so good. The corn crop generally has been greatly damaged by lack of rain, Mr. Zimmerman added, although a large part of the crop may still be saved.

An interesting and very unusual incident was witnessed along Spring creek, nearby the Bush House early Tuesday afternoon. Several boys were grappling for suckers near the falls, opposite John Noll's laundry, when they routed out a monster trout. The latter was apparently badly frightened and confused, for instead of returning to deep water it started like a flash down the creek. The trout had traveled but a short distance when it suddenly found itself in shallow water. It never stopped for an instant, however, but rushed straight ahead, creating a wave in the middle of the stream that at once attracted the attention of persons on the sidewalk. When under the High Street bridge the trout found itself in water so shallow that it fairly leaped over the stones in the bed of the creek. Finally the trout managed to reach deeper water and after darting from one place to another calmed down and lay in a pool, a few feet from the Bush House yard wall, where it could plainly be seen by the crowd which gathered on the sidewalk. While it was, of course, impossible to accurately determine the size of the trout, many persons estimated that it measured fully 22 or 24 inches, if not more.

YOUNG MOTHER'S DEATH

Mrs. Harry Sunday Passes Away at Late Home at Pine Grove Mills.

The blighting hand of death is always attended with sorrow to those who were near to and loved the one taken away. Especially sad was the death on Sunday evening, last, of Mrs. Sadie Goss Sunday, wife of Harry Sunday, at her late home near Pine Grove Mills. But a few short days ago she had become the mother of a sweet baby boy and just at the time when all was joy and happiness over the realization of fondest hopes there came the fear that Mrs. Sunday might not survive and be restored to health. Surrounded by loving friends and receiving the best of care and attention that physicians could render, the young mother gradually became weaker and at 11.30 o'clock on Sunday evening her eyes closed in ever-restful sleep.

Before her marriage Mrs. Sunday was Sadie Goss, a daughter of William and Susan Goss. She was born at Rock Springs and at the time of her untimely death she was 27 years of age. She was married to Harry Sunday, June 30, 1908, and he with two motherless little children, both boys and the younger but one week old, survives, as do also her parents and one sister, Elsie, and two brothers, Samuel E., of Reading, and W. K., of Tyrone. In early girlhood the deceased became united with the Lutheran church and until the time of her illness, in which she gave up her young life as a sacrifice, she found pleasure in actively working in the Master's vineyard. Funeral services were held on Wednesday morning, at 10.30 o'clock, and were largely attended. Further testifying to the deep affection in which she was held by all who knew her were numerous and beautiful floral tributes. The services were conducted by Rev. J. F. Shultz. Interment was made in the cemetery at Pine Grove Mills.

AT WORK ON POOL

Glass Tile Bathing Tank at Y. M. C. A. to be Completed September 1.

As a result of the splendid and very liberal gift by Mrs. M. W. Wilson, the proposed swimming pool at the Y. M. C. A. will soon be a reality. The contrac for the construction of the pool was this week awarded Lewis Wallace, the contract calling for the completion of the pool by September 1, next. Work is now under way. Archibald Allison was awarded the contract for installing the boiler and heating plant.

According to the plans the pool will be 70 feet long and 17 feet, 9 inches in width. The depth of the pool will vary from three or four feet at one end to six or seven feet at the other end. The pool will thus be long enough for distance swimming and deep enough at the one end for diving.

The pool will be of red brick on the outside and will be entirely finished inside with glass tile, making it one of the finest and most beautiful pools in America.

Secretary Weston, in speaking of the new feature, pointed out that the present is a splendid time for the men, women and children in Bellefonte to avail themselves of the use of the pool by becoming members of the association.

A Worthy Cause.

The Members of the Coleville Methodist Episcopal church will hold a festival at Coleville on Tuesday evening, July 25. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the pastor, Rev. S. H. Engler. The cause is a most worthy one and the liberal patronage of the public is earnestly solicited.
